

195

JEROME.: ARIZONA AT LARGE.

Los Angeles Times (1886-1922); Jan 28, 1898; ProQuest Historical Newspapers: Los Angeles Times
pg. 9

JEROME.

JEROME, Ariz., Jan. 25.—Maj. Milsaps, editor of the Pacific Coast War Cry, and Ensign Taylor are in this city, looking over the field with the view of establishing a corps of Salvation Army here. In spite of the terribly cold weather that prevails, they hold their open-air meetings and attract large crowds of curious by-standers. The Salvation Army is an unknown quantity in this great mining camp.

The weather has seriously interfered with the work of rebuilding the burned area and excavations for cellars have come to a stand-still. Such weather is unprecedented, both in point of snowfall and low temperature.

Bishop Kendrick of the Episcopal Church is a noted man in many ways. Although advanced in years, he carries on his work with the vigor of a much younger person. Last summer he floated down the Colorado River from The Needles in a frail canoe in order to visit the mission at the Parker Indian reservation. He was in Jerome last week and held services at the local church. The ladies made up a purse of $10, thinking to do the generous thing, but the worthy prelate refused to accept it, asking that it be used in the church work here.

ARIZONA AT LARGE.

Friday, February 4, is Arbor Day in Arizona.

The Williams News enjoys the unique distinction of being printed on finely-glazed book paper.

A party left Williams a few days ago for the Grand Cañon, well equipped to stand the severe weather.

The box factories at Williams report an unprecedented demand for their product.

Twenty-three new buildings are being erected at Winslow and many more are projected.

The Presbyterian Church at Solomonville was dedicated Sunday.